Lessons and Implications

- Faculty are concerned for the safety and well-being of others as much as they care about themselves.
- Faculty viewed communication about changes to UI operations and spread of Coronavirus favorably. However, communication about re-opening UI for the Fall needs improvement.
- If safety measures are taken, then the majority of faculty who participated in this survey are comfortable teaching face-to-face—however, 26% prefer to teach on-line.
- If safety measures are taken, then the majority of faculty who participated in this survey are comfortable attending meeting and campus events. However, 48% prefer to attend these events virtually.
- There is some confusion about when to wear a facemask vs a face shield.
- There are indications of stress. We're asking faculty to give more effort without compensation, and sometimes without recognition. Stress will likely be compounded over the summer and the next AY. We need to pay attention to this now.
- If we do not protect faculty, we will be unable to fulfill our academic mission.

IOWA

42

Limitations for the data

- Response rate skewed to tenure-track faculty
 - We've looked at data on total N/% of faculty per track and colleges, so cannot comment how representative the data are
- "Institution" is assumed to be UI, but some could have been referring to their College
- Combination of race, gender, and college made some faculty "identifiable"
- The survey occurred before colleges began talking about hiring practices and budget cuts
